Improving Learning through Incentives to Education Managers: What Do We Know?

The crucial role played by teachers in education systems is well-recognized. But what about the middle level of education managers: school principals, regional and local officials, teacher mentors? They may not be in the spotlight, but these “meso-level” actors also play a vital role in delivering education services.

Learn about the latest research on the use of incentives to motivate this group of essential players and the pros and cons of three models adopted in different countries.

Join us for this thematic deep dive and other sessions of the World Bank's Global Conference on Funding Education for Results: Lessons for Accelerated Learning. The two-day hybrid event will address ways to overcome the challenges facing education financing, and promising approaches to strengthen the link between spending and impactful results.
